Social work professionals are at high risk for compassion fatigue and burnout, which can affect work life, home life, and even physical health. Spend time focused on current research, definitions, epidemiology, symptoms, and ways to increase compassion satisfaction and decrease compassion fatigue/secondary PTSD. The course will be experiential and will focus on sixteen resiliency factors for those clinicians who work with traumatized individuals. Receive instruction on instruments to measure the various constructs.

Instructor: Carlton Craig, Ph.D., LCSW
Professor/Director, UNLV School of Social Work
Dr. Craig’s most recent research relates to integrated behavioral health and substance screening, brief intervention, and referral to treatment. He has authored over 60 publications and presentations on childhood trauma and loss, trauma-informed empirically supported treatments, populations fleeing genocide, and secondary Post-traumatic Stress Disorder.
